Notice to owners

If you are advised that the buildings on your property do not have, or appear to not have a building consent or permit you may wish to rectify this situation. For buildings constructed without a building consent or those that were not completed under older legislation prior to 1 July 1992, there are options:

Building Before 1st July 1992

For building work before 1st July 1992 you can provide a report (often called safe and sanitary report) which council will place on the property record for the benefit of current and future owners.

These reports must meet minimum requirements and must be prepared by building professionals, who are members of an approved organisation. Council place these reports on file but takes no responsibilities for such reports.

Building On Or After 1st July 1992

For this category of building work you have two options:

- (A) make an application for a certificate of acceptance
- (B) request for a report to be placed on council files for the benefit of future owners

There may be occasions when both the above applications are required. This is because Council had the option in respect of a Certificate of Acceptance to certify what it has, or is able to inspect. This may well leave a substantial amount of work without certification. Thus an additional report from, for example, an Engineer or Building Surveyor could provide information for future owners of the property.

Both the request for a COA and reports to be placed on a Council's file, need to comply with the information requirements, of a building consent application.

What Is A Certificate Of Acceptance (COA)

Certificates of acceptance (coas) were introduced as part of the building act 2004 to confirm that building work, or part of that work complies with the building code.

A coa may be issued by the council for work that required a building consent, but has been carried out without a consent having been obtained first. It allows for certification of work that has been carried out urgently because of safety issues and where there is no time to apply for and obtain consent because of that emergency.

How Do I Make An Application For A COA?

The council has discretion under the building act on whether or not to issue a certificate. This may involve a pre-application interview. If the council is prepared to accept an application it will be necessary to provide detailed plans and specifications of the work as you would for a building consent application. A standard application form is available and an application fee will be charged as well as normal consent application fees.

All applications need to include detailed plans and specifications; design and/or supervision certificates (for trusses, engineering, electrical, plumbing, drainage, roofing and cladding installers); current certificate of title; a report from a suitably qualified consultant (building consultant or structural engineer) on the applicable construction and compliance with the building code; and a letter from the present owner explaining why a building consent was not obtained.

Insufficient or poor quality information may result in delays in processing your application.

A certificate of acceptance will only cover items that the council can readily inspect to ensure compliance with the new Zealand building code. Council may exclude items that cannot be inspected by council officers. It will be required for specific design components of a project to include the design engineer's ps1 certificate and the ps4 for the 'construction review' of those components.

Penalties For Illegal Building Work

It is a criminal offence to carry out building work for which consent is required without first obtaining a building consent prior to commencing construction. The magnitude of the breach and the deliberate nature of the offence will be assessed before considering a prosecution.

Council now has the ability to impose instant fines for illegal building work. This is a new provision under the building act 2004. The greatest penalty for a homeowner is the fact the records show that there is an illegal building which has not been inspected by council. This has potential implication for the value of their property and any insurance cover.

While such buildings may have a coa, such reports or certificates provide in general, only limited assurance of the standard and quality of the building work. Home owners are advised to obtain independent legal advice and advice from their insurance company.

Applicants need to be aware that if a 'Notice to Fix' has required an application for a 'Certificate of Acceptance', then that does not negate the possibility of prosecution under Section 40 of the Building Act 2004.
